of the Goods.

This caution is rendered especially necessary as large quantities of inferior and defective Linens are prepared; season after season
and sealed with the name of RICHARDSON
by Irish Houses, who, regardless of the injury
thus inflicted upon the American consumer,
and the manufacturers of the genuine Goods,
will not readily abandon a business so profitable, while purchasers can be imposed upon with Goods of a worthless character.

ted to direct the endowment of such a mansion, and to grace it by her presence; albeit to none ever discovered these girls in her, when she was a young girl working for Smith & Brown, one but James Elbert, Academy, who once called her his "princess" in disguise.

Madeline had not been idle. She had the deficiencies in her education made up by severe study, and many things to occupy her thoughts and time: a duty for society, it pressed itself upon her even to annoyance. Not that she was not fond of it; she liked it much. Called her a "princess" in disguise.

own resources; she enjoyed the ecstasy of her unique position as the richest woman in America. What dissatisfied her was, she felt that this was the measure by which she was measured. She was respected, admired, flattered, loved, as the richest woman; until gradually she grew so displeased with this position that, if she had been able, she would have pretended to the loss of her fortune to escape it. She learned to doubt the sincerity of those who approached her, looking with suspicion upon even the few hanger-on.

loved her for herself. But how could she tell? An hundred million dollars was a temptation which might make a saint put on a mask of falsehood. She felt that she stood alone. . . . Day by day, year by year, she remembered with a deeper regret, the love she had proved in her poverty; now, upon this night, she was a truer sadder mourner for James Herbert, than she had been the week of his loss. The conviction of the isolation of her life and the secret grief which was gnawing at her heart-strings, had given that expression of depth and melancholy to her beautiful countenance, more striking in slumber, than when veiled by the effort of waking hours.

in a tiny skiff which she herself propelled, and there, beneath the pitying eye of heaven, with burning tears, and voiceless sobs that racked her bosom with anguish, she had kept her hour of mourning, and returned with the single lily which glimmered in the silver bowl.

Although a woman, strong of heart, and schooled by the discipline of never had she felt so heart-sick and forlorn as upon her return to her chamber from her excursion upon the lake. She cast her eyes upon the magnificence about her: silver and ebony, velvet and lace; jewels, sleeping in their caskets, like beds of glowing fire; toys of nameless price and incomparable beauty; the couch, in whose satin folds she had dreamed so many wild and beauties which should be kept forever sacred to memory of the past before they should be bestowed upon one not proven worthy—and all but filled her with a dreary sense of solitude and responsibility, until, like the miserable Marianne, she exclaimed :

"I am awaary, awaary.
Would God she were dead."

"I am weary, weary,"
"Would God that I were dead!"
"Yes," she murmured, as she threw herself exhausted upon the bed, "would that I were dead, and with him, wherever he may be, since he is not alive and with me here, helping me bear this burden of life. It is too heavy to be borne alone."
(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

"Yes," she murmured, as she threw herself extended upon the bed, "where that I were dead!" and with him, "where ever he may be, and with him, 'not alive'—and with me here, helping me to bear this burden of life. It is too heavy to be borne alone."

Mr. JOSEPH C. LOVEJOY, of Boston, has addressed a letter to his brother, OWEN LOVEJOY, the notorious abolitionist, and member of Congress from Massachusetts. The substance of the latter appeal, to a recent speech of the latter upon the fanaticism of the Democratic party, is in the following synopsis over two columns in the Washington Union. In it Mr. LOVEJOY says that his "convictions at the present time are, not only that the slaveholders have a complete vindication of their present position, but they are entitled to be regarded as benefactors to their country & to the world." "Further," he says, "it cannot be denied that the idea of slavery runs all through the Bible; it was stamped upon the entire history of the Jewish nation, and upon the history of every vigorous nation."

time are, not only that the slaveholders have a complete vindication of their position, but that they are entitled to look upon themselves as benefactors to the country & to the human race." Farthered in his idea of slavery runs all through the Bible; it was stamped upon the entire history of the Jewish nation, and upon the history of every vigorous nation upon the face of the earth; indeed, I strongly suspect this is the normal condition of large portions of a depraved nature, and I can readily believe that in any man, the relation of slaveholder, in all good conscience, is an entire Divine approbation. There are visible footprints of God's disapprobation of the abolitionism of this country.

The visible footprints of God's disapprobation of the abolitionists of this country.

According to the Ohio Statesman, he is banished from Baden, Germany, for participating in the revolution of 1848. He reached the United States in time to volunteer in the Mexican war, and was wounded and disgraced.

According to the "Ostseeblatt," he for participating in the revolution of

in time to volunteer in the Mexican

at the battle of Buena Vista.

He was at the battle of Buena Vista. After the war, he travelled from Maine to Louisiana, and to the frontiers of civilization, as a journeyman printer. He announced the first German paper ever published in San Francisco, and subsequently joined a theatrical company in Cincinnati, and was everywhere known as a soldier, poet, musician, and wit. He never remained long enough in one place to call it his home, but wherever he went he left friends who admired his extraordinary talents and his characteristic vagaries. He could sing a yarn, or to a point, make a speech, or turn a song, bring a melody from a guitar, or play a glass of finger beer with unparelled wit and cosmopolitan elegance. He changed.

He went to his home, but wherever he went he left friends who admired his extraordinary talents and his characteristic vagaries. He could spin a yarn as long as a poem, make a speech as long as a gong, bring a melody from a guitar, or a glass of amber beer with unqualified merit and cosmopolitan elegance.

A westerner, after having delivered himself of the following "The Gleanings of Europe," which stands as a monument on the Atlantic and the other "Pacific coasts," was unable to proceed any further. A bystander, and some solicited for the matter, were so fully compelled to "spread the word," that he exclaimed: "My friend, if you do not relieve your angle pretty soon, you will drown."

American Eagle, which stands so proudly
on the Atlantic and the other Pacific coasts," was unable to proceed any further. A bystander, realizing the solicitude for the noble bird, was greatly compelled to spread his
"wings," exclaimed, "Friend, if you relieve your eagle pretty soon he will split open."

1. The first step in the process is to identify the problem or issue that needs to be addressed. This involves gathering information and understanding the context of the problem.

1. The first step in the process of the development of a new product is the identification of a market need. This is often done through market research, which can be conducted in a variety of ways, including surveys, focus groups, and interviews. The goal of market research is to gather information about the needs and preferences of potential customers, as well as to identify any gaps in the market that a new product could fill.

Figure 1. The effect of the concentration of the Agrobacterium suspension on the transformation efficiency of Agrobacterium strains. The Agrobacterium strains were grown in YEA medium for 24 h at 28 °C. The cell concentration was adjusted to 10⁸ cells/ml. The cells were then mixed with the plant tissue and the transformation efficiency was determined. The results are shown as the mean ± SD of three independent experiments. The asterisk indicates a significant difference (p < 0.05) between the control and the treated groups.
